What takes your breath away?

A beautiful sunrise? An amazing view of the mountains? A kindness received?

How about these things that I've heard about recently...

The long, gentle, persevering, loving, joyful patience of that couple with a severely disabled child and then teenager and then young adult, and then ... The medical student who in the middle of that most demanding course did the three-hour there-and-back journey across London every two weeks for two years to spend the evening with a friend suffering with a severe mental health challenge ... Every two weeks. Without fail. For two years. The cheque that came in the post from a couple we weren't even related to but who knew we had to move house and who'd figured out that the size of the mortgage was going to make it tough for us for a fair while ...

Those things don't just take my breath away, they're so extraordinary they evoke more than wonder and gratitude, they evoke praise, an awe that God can make people so very loving, so very generous. And they make me want God to bless them, to pray that he would ... lavishly.

In the first three chapters of Ruth, we've already seen actions that evoke admiration and wonder and prayer. But deep love has a way of surprising us

Take care Reverend Antony
